

During my school life I was always interested in participating in different school activities such as Olimpiads and social projects. Most of all, these academic competitions were connected to Humanities and Liberal Arts. My sphere of interest has been spreading to learning and achieving in my English and Russian studies. Therefore I am an active participant in that field of learning. My brightest achievement, in my opinion, was the participation in a school project such as «Vivat, Orator!» where students had to show their oratory speaking skills and demonstrate creative thinking skills. That project developed in my personality such skills as confidence and openness, influenced a lot on my further academic achievements.

I also was taking part in different volunteer projects and thanks to that I obtained some new skills for me such as adaptability, independence and critical thinking. I enjoy being a part of such volunteer projects and I don't plan to quit them in a foreseeable future.

Speaking about my greatest interest in life, I can say that it is learning languages, especially English. It can be seen in the amount of Olimpiads where I participated that were connected to showing English skills. I am concerned that by learning languages I can increase my experience in different international projects and enlarge my opportunities in the future.

I can totally relate to the mission of European Humanitarian University and hope that I will be able to be involved in the process of achieving them.
